A Strange Story.

A curious incident is reported in the American papers. About ten years ago a Jew in straightened circumstances left Transylvania for America to improve his position in the new world. He left a wife and several children behind, and promised that as soon as it was within his means that he should send them some money from America. There for tune smiled upon him and when he had amassed a fortune of 60,000 florins he amassed a fortune of 60,000 florins he resolved to return home and surprise his family with his wealth. He started without having apprised his family of his intended return and on his way home he arrived at Hamburg, where he was seized with so dangerous an illness that he made a will bequeathing all his prop-erty to his wife. He recovered, how-ever, only to find that during his sickness his money had been stolen from him by a man who nursed him. A few benevolent persons sympathizing with his misfortunes, collected about hundred florins, when the unfortunate Jew re-solved to return to America, in order to retrieve his fortunes. In the meanwhile the nurse decamped with his booty to America, where, shortly after his arrival, he died suddenly. The American au-thorities sent the coffin, with the 60,000 florins, to Transylvania, and as the will was also found in the coffin, the authorities at the same time acquainted the rel-atives with the death of the testator. After the usual period of mourning, the wife contracted a second marriage. The first husband had, however, again saved a considerable sum of money, and event-ually returned to his native country to find his wife married to another man. The event caused a great sensation in the neighborhood, and it is stated that a conference of rabbis is about to be held to determine to which of the two husbands the woman belongs .- Jewish

The Parting Words of Newton S. Grimwood With a Brother Journalist.

By E. E. Wood, of the Chicago Journal's Editorial Staff.

Lake Michigan is calm and serene today. The gale that raged so madly on that terribleThursday night has subsided. The high-dashing waves, tired of agita-tion, have laid themselves down to rest in their mother's bosom, and the winds and clouds and dashing spray have shrunk back into the caves of their nativity. As we look out over her wide expanse of waters, Lake Michigan, to-day, does not seem like the treachorous thing she is. Her aspect is that of peace and gentleness. Her blue face shines like a mirror in the summer sun. It is as smooth and silent as a vast meadow. You would not suspect that but yesterday that face was an expanse of aque-ous hills and mountains—that her great, deep bosom, now so quiet, almost motionless, was but a few hours ago heav-ing and tumbling and dashing in very ing and tumbling and dashing in very madness. An uncertain and deceifful thing is this great lake—as changeful as the whims of a coquette; as quiet as a sleeping infant when at rest, but as tumultuous as a battlefield when aroused by the tempest. And the tempests that awake her from her placid slumbers, and lash her every atom into fury, come upon her sometimes as suddenly as the lightning's flash.

On that evening when Donaldson and Grimwood ascended from Chicago's Dearborn Park, in ag eat balloon, agentle wind was moving eastward, and upon its wings they sailed off over this great, wide lake. They feared no ill; they had confidence in their aerial ship. That which the daring Donaldson had accomplished so often, they felt could be done again. And so they flew away, and at that hour neither they nor we had any misgivings of their fate.

"I only care to go this once, just for the experience," said Mr. Grimwood, as I approached him standing in the shadow of that fatal air ship, and-must

I say it, in the shadow of death.

"The wind is unfavorable, but per haps an upper current will make that all right," said I, encouragingly, for I saw by the resolute expression on his quiet face that it would be useless to urge him to give up the trip.

"I guess they are trying to frighten the reporters into showing the white feather." he remarked, after a short pause, "by saying that Donaldson ex-pects to be carried into Michigan, with the chances of being gone two or three

"Then the trip will be more interesting," was the reply I made, "and you will have a good report to give the

"Yes," he said, "that's what I hope; I would like to land in Michigan; but," he continued, "I guess I ought to have a little more money if I am going so far from home. And pulling out his pocketbook, which had only one bank bill and some small change in it, he accepted an extra ten dollars from Mr. Adams, a brother reporter who was standing near by, say-ing, "I guess that will do." The writer then gave Mr. Grimwood a field glass, with which to aid his observations while in midair, the glass having the saving the sa atrument might be troublesome, or get lost, it was retained, and to-day remains with us as a memento of that sad parting hour.

"If I should see that we are settling into the lake," said Mr. Grimwood; during the conversation which followed, "the first thing that I shall do will be to pull off my boots, and, being perfectly at home at swimming, I think I could then adjust my life preserver and stand a good deal."

At this point other friends crowded around, and while the concourse of curious people grew momentarily greater and more unmanageable, Professor Don-aldson, the aeronaut, appeared, and began giving his orders, preparatory to cutting loose for the ascent.

Meanwhile, Mr. Grimwood was received. ing the good-byes of friends and instruc-Mr. W. K. Sullivan, whose ambassador he had volunteered to be in the pending perilous journey. When all was ready, three newspaper reporters were prepared for the ascent, but the balloon seeming to be overburdened, first one and then another of the press representatives climbed from the basket, at the request of Professor Donaldson, and none were left but Grimwood, whose strong determinstion to go would not let him yield the opportunity to remain behind,

At this last moment, prompted by an interest akin to brotherhood, the writer of this made another effort to gain a position where he might say a parting, en-couraging word to the intrepid young journalist, new being thrown around by the laboring air-ship, and succeeded in pressing his way through the jamming mass of humanity to the side of the bal-loon. He saw me, and while he held by the ropes of the basket with his right hand, to keep from being thrown out, he reached out his left and grasped mine.

"Bon voyage."
"Adieu!" said he, and soon he was be-yond the reach of all friendly hands and voices below.

I visited the scene of the ascension, not so much from curiosity—for I have seen balloons go up before—but because Grimwood, one of our own Journal family, was going. And I went to see him off, not so much because he was to represent the paper in the trip, as be-cause of my personal interest in the one who was going. Had not I, in common with others, seen his journalistic course brighten from day to day as a young newspaper man? Had we not all long since been convinced that his was destined to be a brilliant future in the world is a little braid of hair from the heads of of newspaper workers? Had we not washington and Jackson."

and his sterling worth and true Christian principles? All these, and many more, were the incentives which led me to Dearborn Park on that pleasant Thursday afternoon, which in a few hours so suddenly changed to a dark and tempestuous night, to say good bye to Newton S. Grimwood. And this deep regard for him still supports the hope that his departure that evening out over that his departure that evening out over the great, wide, treacherous Lake Michigan was not forever.

A Plexible Stone,

Knoxville Press and Herald, 22d.1 Captain George Mathes, editor of the Winston (N. C.) Sentinel, has favored us with a handsome specimen of flexible sandstone-we know no better name for it-which is a genuine curiosity, in this section at least. The specimen is about ten inches long, one and a half inches wide and one inch thick. It is a clear white stone, composed of fine sand, thickly interspersed with shining particles of mica. It appears as hard as ordinary sandstone, yet is flexible, in all directions, like a block of India-rubber, or rather like a half-dried brick, although it is incompressible, being as rigid to the touch as the firmest sandstone. It would serve as a coarse whetstone. Captain Mathes brought the stone with him from North Carolina, where he says beds of it are to be found. What its special valuable uses may be we are not advised. The specimen may be seen on our table.

Archbishop Tait, the Primate of the English State Church, is undergoing se-vere criticism for the manner in which he has distributed his patronage. The World charges that he has not in seven years bestowed a living on a man of intellectual power, with the single exception of Professor Plumptree, of King's College. The John Ball, a Church of England paper, says that "a comparison of promotions shows eleven corates as against fourteen friends and relations, and that the average money value is £268 to each of the former, while each of the latter has £656 per year."

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Bon't Make War on the Stomach. If you are bilious, dyspeptic and constipa ted, don't make war on the stomach by suctives and powerful astringents. Such a procedure damages digestion and weakens the bowels, leaving stomach, liver and intestines, after the immediate effect, in a condition of greater disorder than before. That complete relief which remedies of the above description signally fall to afford is obtained by using Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. And for the best of reasons. Billiousness is the result of inacof reasons. Billiousness is the result of inac-tivity of the liver, dyspepsia of weakness of the digestive organs, and constipation is pro-duced by the above causes operating together. The Bitters, being a powerful stomachic, over-come indigestion by stimulating the secretion of gastric juice, relieve billiousness by promo-ting greater activity of the liver, and thus enable the bowels to act with renewed regu-larity.
